Following 52 years of a life filled with adventure and intimately entwined with revolutionary class struggle and humanity, Max Watts died in his bed on November 23 in Sydney, Australia, surrounded by friends and comrades. Watts' contributions were numerous, but his final focal center was on organizing resistance within the military. He forged strong relationships with us in Workers World Party. We worked together an ocean apart to help GIs break the chain of command within the imperialist U.S. military. The increase in rank-and-file awareness in the 1960s and 1970s of their own interests and power helped make a mass conscription army unreliable for imposing U.S. rule on Vietnam and intervening elsewhere.

By John Catalinotto (published December 11, 2010)

MAX WATTS (1928-2010)

He built resistance inside imperialist war machine

By John Catalinotto (published December 11, 2010)

The WWP was the first, and for a while the only, U.S. organization able to

Workers World Party

http://www.workers.org/2010/world/max_watts_1216/